THE CANAL BILL.

The ultra British contingent in Congress seems to have been outwitted by the more American portion of that pro-British body who supported the canal bill and passed it in the House. It is strange that opposition of a serious nature should be made to an enterprise about the utility of which there is no question. The demands of the nation are such that it is imperative there should be a waterway over the isthmus. The demands of trade are such that there is no excluding the ever present necessity there is for a more rapid transit from the east to the west by water.

The demand for a more ready means of passage for our warships between our east and west coasts is becoming each day more plain. The requirements of a national character are more pronounced as the months pass, and the whole people are becoming aware of the necessity there is upon Congress to provide the methods and authorize the means to begin and complete the work in the near future. What the fate of the bill will be in the Senate when it comes before that more aggressive British body, remains to be seen.

The chief opposition will be made by that part of the Senate who are anxious that Great Britain should control the canal, or at least occupy a position that will deprive the United States of its control in time of war, which above all others is the time when Uncle Sam should control it. The anti-Monroe doctrine sentiment there has been developed by McKinley's administration causes astonishment to those who favor an American position by the government in matters that are purely American.

The attitude of the administration in the canal business and treaty ratification proceedings have been weak, and so much so that any proceeding in private business affairs between men, including like indications of weakness, would be taken by business people as weakness. When proceedings include affairs of State that give to diplomats and to the business world an impression that the management is effeminate, there is not any statesman like direction to State business, such as a great nation should declare by action to the nations to maintain necessary national respect at home and abroad.

A people are measured through their representatives in national affairs by others. When weakness is a leading feature in representation in diplomatic business, the nation represented suffers in its character and standing before an intelligent world and loses prestige, where it should have authority to command attention and respect.

The condition in all departments of the public service is a fault of the times. There will be a change in the direction of public affairs by the people before there is any change that will give strength by representation in the direction and management of diplomatic affairs. Vassalage that is disgraceful to an intelligent and strong people in the highest departments of State is not in harmony with the character of the American people for intellectual force, natural and acquired, which truth is becoming painful to the more learned.

The more pro-British element in the Senate will oppose the bill as it does not meet their ideas respecting the attitude the United States should occupy to Great Britain. There is no anything in it that will meet toadyism to royalty, or that will meet the idea entertained by a part of the members of the Senate of the superior position occupied by the aristocracy of England to the people of the United States, which is not as it should be as it is not a just representation of a free and independent nation possessed of wealth and power among the nations.

The bill is not in any way offensive to England as it does not in any way interfere with English rights. It contains, as it should do, a more dignified position by the United States to matters purely American. There is no cause for any unfriendly feeling in any of its provisions, as no cause of an unfriendly nature may be found toward England when the United States government retains the power to care for its property and its rights on the South American continent thereby sustaining the Monroe Doctrine together with the additional right by our government to control the canal when in a state of war by making such fortifications as may be necessary for its defence and maintenance as a means of war.

The only theory upon which the Monroe Doctrine can be sustained is through American supremacy upon American territory which can be maintained without giving offense to any European power. The chief objection to the bill by those who will oppose it is, that it removes the power of England to interfere with the canal in time of war, or in any particular through concessions made as was proposed by the Hay treaty to dictate in American affairs respecting its management which could not be permitted and maintain the Monroe Doctrine upon American ideas.

NEWS OF THE STATE

Brief Items of Local and General Interest to Our Readers.

Wells, Elko county, will soon vote on the proposition to build a new school house to cost $2,500.

Leon Hall, the electrician, says the Comstock companies will be ready for the electric power as soon as the Floriston company is ready to turn it on.

Jacob Werner, Wm. Virgin, D. W. Virgin, T. N. Hansen, Frank Maegher and Theodore Tillman are reported to have bonded the group of copper mines near Genoa to Salt Lake people.

Willard O. Gentry, who was arrested at Winnemucca for perjury in connection with the Bouton cattle stealing case, has been bound over to appear before the Grand Jury with bonds fixed at $500.

Dr. Joseph R. N. Owen, a resident of the Comstock in early days, died at Eureka Thursday morning. Charles R. Hancock, Mrs. Janet Bartholemaw, Mrs. Minnie Hancock and Jacob Kuchel, all residents of Eureka, also died within the past ten days.

A telegram received this afternoon states that at a meeting of the Comstock pumping association held in San Francisco today, it was decided that no electric pumps should be installed on the Comstock. What sort of pump is to be selected is not yet known.—Report.

Resting the Muscles.
 When a man is tired, he stretches his arms and legs and yawns. Birds and animals, so far as possible, follow his example.

Birds spread their feathers and also yawn, or gape. Fowls often do this. Fish yawn; they open their mouths slowly until they are round, the bones of the head seem to loosen, and the gills open.

Dogs are inveterate yawners and stretchers, but seldom sneeze unless they have a cold. Cats are always stretching their bodies, legs and claws, as every one knows who has a cat for a pet.

Horses stretch violently when and after indulging in a roll, but not, as a rule, on all fours.

A stag when stretching sticks out his hind, stretches his fore feet out and hollows his back and neck as though trying to creep under a bar.

Most ruminant animals stretch when they rise up after lying down. Deer do it regularly; so do cows. This fact is so well known that if a cow, when arising from lying down, does not stretch herself it is a sign she is ill.

The reason for this is plain—the stretch moves every muscle of the body, and if there be any injury anywhere it hurts.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Measuring a Tree.
 Supposing a woodchopper in the Maine forest is told to get out a mast for a yacht. He knows that he must find a tree which is straight for 60 feet below the branches. It would be very troublesome to climb trees and measure them with a tape measure, so he, without knowing it, uses practical trigonometry. He measures off 60 feet in a straight line from the tree, and then he cuts a pole, which, when upright in the ground, is exactly as tall as himself. This he plants in the earth his own length from the end of his 60 feet.

For example, if he is six feet tall, he plants his six foot pole 64 feet from the tree. Then he lies down on his back, with his head at the end of the line and his feet touching the pole, and sights over the top of it. He knows that where his eyes touch the tree is almost exactly 60 feet from the ground.—Weekly Bouquet.

Fatal Love.
 That's a pathetic story of the Gourd fishing boat crew. No class of men face death more frequently than the hardy fisher toilers of the sea, and among none is a genuine heroism more frequently displayed.

The Gourd boat was manned by a father and his four sons. When the boat sank, three of the latter went with her. The old man got an oar, and soor the fourth son appeared by his side. But the oar could only support one, and the lad, taking in the situation at once, bade his parent farewell in the words, "Weel, weel, father, I maun jist awn," and sank.

Only readers familiar with the northern dialect will fully appreciate the depth of kindly resignation and true feeling which the words denote. The father endured terrible sufferings, but was ultimately picked up. "Greater love hath no man than this,"—Westminster Gazette.

CHOYNSKI LASTS TWO ROUNDS

The Sailor Boy Wins Fresh Laurels==A Brief but Lively Battle.

Special to the JOURNAL.

CHICAGO, May 8.—Sharkey knocked out Joe Choynski in the second round tonight at Tattersall's.

Round 1.—Sharkey floored Choynski with a left swing on the ear. Choynski gets up at once. The sailor then floored him again with a left on the jaw, but Choynski gets up briskly and lands left on wind. They exchange left and right and the sailor goes to his knees from a left on the jaw. Sharkey floored Choynski with a right swing on the jaw and the latter sends the sailor to his knees with a right on the jaw.

Round 2.—Choynski goes at the sailor and puts a left jab to the eye. Sharkey floors him with a right on the back of the neck and staggers him as soon as he arises with a left on the ear. They exchange jabs and both spar for an opening. Joe ducks a right swing for the ear and jabs Tom in the face. Sharkey puts a left swing on the nose and follows it with a right swing on the same place, knocking Choynski down and out.

Sharkey nearly fell through the ropes after knocking Joe down. The timekeepers claimed that Joe was not out as the round ended before the count was finished. Joe remained on the floor, his seconds working on him and at the end of a minute he was unable to respond and was declared out.

Hunter Has Clear Sailing.

LONDON, May 8.—The Standard hears that information has been officially received of a plot to assassinate Lord Roberts, that the latter has been warned and telegrams are now passing between the Cape authorities, Lord Roberts and the home authorities on the subject.
